Dear Public service commission,

It is my understanding that there will be a hearing regarding Rocky Mountain Power's request to levy a fee on people who have installed solar panels. I would strongly urge you to deny their request. As you know, RMP is owned by Warren Buffet, one of the wealthiest people in the world. This seems to me like a clear money grab by him and his company and a way to discourage people from becoming less dependent on buying power from him.

As one who chose to install solar panels on my house, my prime motivation was to be a responsible citizen and do my part to help the environment. I am grateful for incentives and my decreased power bill but that was not my prime motivation. It seems so counter intuitive that the public service commission would grant the RMP request and thereby discourage people from doing the right thing for the environment. I would strongly urge you to deny this request or any other request that comes forward that would discourage people from protecting our planet earth.

Thank you for time and your consideration.
