As a taxpayer and resident of Utah I insist that the PUBLIC Service Commission put a stop to Rocky Mountain Power's attempt to penalize homeowners and businesses with solar panels. We need MORE green, renewable, locally produced power, not less. If anything the State of Utah should provide tax write-offs and other incentives for homeowners and businesses to move to solar, wind, geothermal or other green energy. We have some of the worst air in the nation, both in the winter and the summer. This is an issue that affects every resident, especially children, the elderly and those with asthma or other breathing issues.

If approved, Rocky Mountain Power's proposed solar tax would deter Utah's transition to cleaner local energy that benefits all ratepayers and creates local jobs. Rooftop solar customers help the utility avoid peak energy purchases and deliver locally generated electricity to their neighbors.

We plan to install solar on our home within the next 5 years, something that will benefit not only ourselves, but our entire community since we will use less (or zero) coal fired power, thus reducing toxic emissions into our air.

The PUBLIC Service Commission must do the right thing for the public it was set up to serve, and not a corrupt mega-corporation.

Sincerely,
Teresa Tate
