I'm writing to express my opposition to Rocky Mountain Power's proposed monthly fee targeting customers that generate their own energy using solar panels. These customers have made a significant investment that offsets Rocky Mountain's polluting energy with clean-air energy.

These customers actually save Rocky Mountain (and all of us) money by protecting against fuel price fluctuation, by reducing the need for new energy generation facilities, and by improving our health through cleaner air.

Charging these customers a penalty sends the wrong message. Penalizing these customers for spending a significant amount of money to benefit all our health, and even Rocky Mountain's bottom line, sends a message that will prevent some future customers from investing in this technology that benefits us all. Rather than being penalized, these customers should be praised for their willingness to do something to help our environment, health, and bottom line.
