To whom it may concern at Public Service Commission:

I participated in the 2014 Rocky Mountain Power lottery. I was one of the many (83% of 1466 applications) who did not win a slot in the lottery. As consumer interest in solar power and concern about global warming has increased, the number of people enrolling in the lottery makes it more unlikely that one will win. In order to support Americans who are willing to take on the economic burden of converting to renewable energy, I believe that the number of lottery winners should be increased. I would like to see the lottery expanded.
