Public Service Commission of Utah,

I want to know why the change on payment credits was allowed two years ago for rooftop solar customers from Rocky Mountain Power company. Did you follow what California regulators did? [State Supreme Court unanimously hands win to homeowners with solar panels over power companies: 'We don't need \[to be in\] an affordability crisis'](#).

If you did then this is why I'm paying more for electricity in the last two years when I invested a great deal of money to avoid paying this much, and help them out since all of the power plant closures the government has unlawfully done in the past two decades in this country as the US Supreme court has ruled.

You had better change your rate payments and put them back where they were or else you will find yourselves losing in court too! This is wrong changing rate payments after customers already made the great investments. It's like having a savings certificate on a rate you agreed to with a financial institution only to have the financial institution change the rates before the savings certificate is due. You can't change the rules once the investment is made that is unlawful. I really hope our State regulators are honest and hold to the very highest integrity because it sure looks like customers who invested a great deal of their money have been taken.
