

NEW YORK TIMES CROSSWORD

No. 0512

FROM THE ASTRONAUT'S LOGBOOK
BY DANIEL BODILY / EDITED BY JOEL FAGLIANO

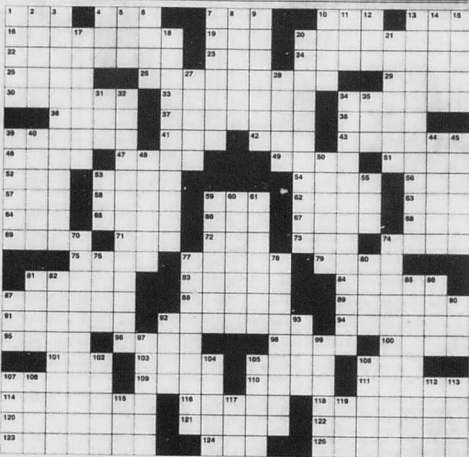

Daniel Bodily, of Westbury, Minn., is a robotics research engineer. His crosswords often include a visual element, as seen in the middle of the grid here. A self-described "left-brained person," he notes that crosswords are "the closest I'll come to being an artist myself."

There are thousands of words in the English language that were borrowed and adapted from other languages, including Latin and ancient Greek. Other languages have their own sound patterns, and so English speakers pronounce those words differently. Language evolves over time, so there are many words that have their roots in words that were common in ancient times. That helps explain why sometimes English words have strange letters, such as PTEROSAUR, JOEL, BREAK and LAMB.

Identify the six words featured in our puzzle, each of which has a silent letter shown. We've given you a clue to each word.

Can you find a word with a silent letter in today's paper?

- A double-bladed instrument used for cutting things
- A round handle that allows you to open a door
- A large spotted cat indigenous to Africa and Asia
- A round flat cap usually associated with France
- A stringed musical instrument with a fretted fingerboard
- Someone who participates in a sport that uses grappling techniques
