

ABOUT UCCU People over profits.

Who We Are

While banks and credit unions may appear similar on the surface, there are important distinctions in our cooperative structure and member-driven purpose.

As a not-for-profit financial cooperative, our mission differs from traditional banks. We don't aim to generate profits for external shareholders. Instead, we provide maximum value directly to our members (customers) by returning excess earnings through lower loan rates, higher savings yields, and innovative offerings tailored to their needs.

At UCCU, our members are more than just account holders. They are the true owners who shape our direction through an elected volunteer board of directors. This ensures we operate in alignment with our members' values and best interests.

In essence, our cooperative model positions UCCU as more than just a financial institution. We are a trusted partner and advocate, singularly dedicated to empowering our members and their families to achieve their financial goals and dreams.

Dedicated Volunteers

In addition to being owned by its members, UCCU has always been led by a volunteer board of directors. These men and women generously donate their time and expertise to support this credit union's mission of "People-over-Profits" by empowering our members with innovative banking technology, helping our members save more, and serving our communities.
