Chicago Sky players say they were harassed outside team hotel

By MARK PULEO | The Athletic

Multiple Chicago Sky players shared their accounts of being harassed outside the team's hotel in Washington, D.C., on Wednesday night, with star rookie Angel Reese saying a teammate had a camera put in her face as she got off the bus.

"This really is outta control and needs to stop," Reese wrote on X.

The Sky arrived in Washington, D.C., ahead of their game against the Washington Mystics on Thursday night. According to the Chicago Sun-Times, the team was harassed by a man targeting Chennedy Carter, who has received nationwide attention for her hard foul on Caitlin Clark in the Sky's game against the Indiana Fever on June 1. The WNBA later upgraded the foul to a Flagrant 1.

Sky forward Brianna Turner said she wasn't at the scene of the incident, but "the absurd headlines recently has certainly created an unstable environment for our safety."

Turner and Sky general manager Jeff Pagliocca credited team security for de-escalating the situation and separating the man from the players.

"Thank God for security," Sky forward Isabelle Harrison posted. "My teammate being harassed at our hotel is insane. Couldn't even step off the bus."

A video circulating on X on Thursday showed an interaction between an unidentified person repeatedly asking Carter, "Have you gotten a chance to reach out to Caitlin?" as Carter walked from the team bus.

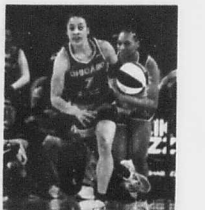
Carter did not appear to respond to the questions in the video clip, which showed another individual stepping between her and the person holding the camera, attempting to block the camera's view. It is unclear if the clip showed the entire interaction.

Carter's hip check on Clark has triggered a week of attention, both within the league and far outside of it. On Monday, Sky coach Teresa Weatherspoon called Carter's foul "not appropriate." On Wednesday, Indiana Congressman Jim Banks penned a letter to WNBA Commissioner Cathy Engelbert about opponents' treatment of Clark.

Banks also called out Reese for cheering on Carter in the moment of the foul. On Tuesday, Reese said she's okay with being the "bad guy" in her years-long rivalry with Clark if it helps grow women's basketball.

"I'll take the bad guy role and I'll continue to take that and be that for my teammates," Reese said. "And if I want to be that, I know I'll go down in history. I'll look back in 20 years and be like, yeah, the reason why we're watching women's basketball is not just because of one person. It's because of me, too. And I want y'all to realize that, like, it's not just because of one person.

"A lot of us have done so much for this game, and Chennedy has been here before, obviously, but there are so many great players in this league that have deserved this for a really, really long time and luckily it's coming now."



CHARLES REX OBERGAST | The AP

The Chicago Sky's Chennedy Carter has received widespread attention for her hip-check foul on Indiana rookie Catlin Clark.

This amendment, therefore, specifies the time frame and methodology used to make these interim payments.
DIH does not expect this change to affect total annual expenditures for the Medicaid program.
This proposed change, if approved by the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS), becomes retroactively effective to February 21, 2024.
A copy of this change may be obtained from Craig Devashrayee (801-538-6641), or by writing the Technical Writing Unit, Utah Department of Health & Human Services, P.O. Medicaid Disproportionate Share Hospital Payments
The Division of Integrated Healthcare (DIH) will submit a change to the Medicaid State Plan to update sections related to disproportionate share hospitals (DSH). This amendment zeros the add-on amount in Section 421 and increases the percentages of the allotment allocated to other provider classifications. This amendment is based on appropriation changes to the Medicaid agency.
DIH does not expect this update to affect total annual expenditures for the Medicaid program. While the add-on amount is being eliminated, increases to other DSH programs will likely offset the add-on reduction. Therefore, overall use of the federal DSH allotment will likely remain unchanged.
This proposed change, if approved by the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS), becomes effective October 1, 2024.
