Subject: Consumer Representation

To Whom It May Concern

It appears the Public Service Commission intends to change its rules to make it more difficult for the consumer of public utilities to be represented and have input into decisions being made that effects them. WHY? In a free and democratic society this input is vital to the final outcome of regulations of these necessary services. I understand not only are individuals or groups being discouraged from speaking about their concerns, but they possibly would have to have an attorney represent them. WHY?
